

I would request the FCC not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

I am very happy with the number of telemarketing calls that have decreased at my home since I added my phone number to the State's "no call list." Due to caller ID, I was able to tell that telemarketers would previously call my home sometimes 10 times a day. Since I have been on the "no call list," I rarely, if ever, receive telemarketing calls. This is much appreciated. It enables my spouse and myself to not have to deal with annoying, hassling telemarketers, and we do not have to interrupt our dinner for calls we were not expecting and did not ask to receive.

I think this new law is very important, and I hope that it is as strict as possible to protect consumers' quality of life in their homes. Please do not diminish its strength.
